No Doubt That Most Vatican Council Members Would Have Voted For Draft On Religious Freedom

The Vatican Council heard that the Pope had rejected a petition signed by at least 500 prelates which was aimed at securing some sort of vote on the question of religious liberty before the close of the then current session. Instead the Pope agreed to a request from a smaller group of members that more time be allowed for reflection, says the London Times, before a vote was taken on so serious a matter. This decision meant that the session ended with no formal acceptance of the draft on religious freedom. The successful request for postponement was made under the rules of procedure, and presumably one of the factors leading to the Pope's acceptance of it, and rejection of the rival petition, was that he felt the regulations should be followed scrupulously.

Announcing the papal verdict on these two moves Cardinal Tisserant, chairman of the Council presidency, pointed out the need for respecting the rules. He added that the Pope had also borne in mind the need to respect the liberty of all the Council fathers, and their desire to have time for careful study before being called upon to vote. The declaration would come forward for a vote at the next session and would, if possible, have priority.

So for the moment ended the bitterly contested affair of whether or not the Council fathers would be able to go home at that time. Deemed both the highest and the lowest point the Roman Church reached in its attempt to attain acceptance of the principle of religious liberty. The decision turned out to be a disappointment to many of the more progressive minded prelates, and a source of comfort to the conservatives who have always disliked the whole idea of endorsing such freedom and have worked hard to prevent a vote.

This draft was far-reaching. The fundamental points were that in matters of religion no man could be made a victim of coercion on the part of others; religious liberty was demanded by human dignity; religion was above the competence of the state; and the state should recognize and defend the free exercise of religion by all its citizens.

In a way these sentiments have their endorsement by the Council, because the report from which this brief paraphrase is taken was received with immense applause. This, perhaps, is the most important element in the whole controversy.

The Council may have been denied its vote because of a whole series of circumstances. Certainly there was right-wing pressure against it of the most obstinate kind, says the London Times. There was also a genuine feeling from a number of bishops who accept the principle of religious liberty that they could not properly have been asked to vote on a heavily revised and enlarged text which had only been introduced into the Council on the last day but one of its session. And there was the procedural means of escape at hand used by the conservatives and by those refusing it to be limited.

There can nevertheless be no doubt that most members of the Council would have voted in favour of the declaration had it ever come to the floor. This may be a poor substitute for a formal vote which would have shown the world the acceptance of so important a principle by the Roman Church. But it is the best which can be made at present of what is quite obviously an unsatisfactory situation.

Why did the text appear so late at the Council? A highly placed member of the secretariat for Christian Unity which was responsible for the drafting of this and other texts, has said that the pressure of work was heavy and the secretariat had first to deal with the draft decree on ecumenism and the declaration on the Jews, says the London Times. This left little time for dealing with the hundreds of suggested modifications and views expressed in writing on the statement dealing with religious liberty.

It is also certain that the career of this statement suffered from a certain amount of obstruction. The heartfelt opposition of the small but influential core of real conservatives found, even in some of the higher reaches of the Pope's closest advisers, direct or indirect support from those who doubted from the beginning the wisdom of putting the Roman Church to the strain and test of having to debate a subject of such a controversial nature to many of the prelates.

It is difficult to see what more the Pope could have done unless he had cared to take on himself

Former Barber Founded Concord Hotel, A World's Largest

Arthur Winarick, a former barber who founded the Concord Hotel, one of the world's largest resort hotels, died of a heart attack. His age was seventy-five years. Mr. Winarick was chairman of A. R. Winarick, Inc., a large cosmetics and drug manufacturer, with plants in Long Island City, Queens, New Brunswick and Newark, N. J., and offices in New York and Los Angeles.

He was born in Novograd-Volynsky, Russia, and migrated to the United States at the age of seventeen years. Mr. Winarick became a barber and later a distributor of barber supplies, says the New York Times. Then he began to develop and manufacture hair tonics and shaving lotions, founding the corporation of his name, which produces Jeris hair tonic.

In the early nineteen-thirties Mr. Winarick visited the Catskills. He decided to become a host and he acquired the Kiamesha Ideal Hotel, changed its name to the Concord, and guided its growth and development.

The hotel at Kiamesha Lake, N. Y., of which his son-in-law, Raymond Parker, is managing director, has a coliseum-size night club and a swimming pool, golf, and other facilities on a [illegible]

Mr. Winarick enjoyed mingling with his guests. His remarkable memory permitted him to greet a surprising number by name. He was a patron and sponsor of the Jewish Theological Seminary, Bnai Brith, the United Jewish Appeal, and Israeli bond drive.

Surviving are his widow, the former Mrs. Helen Haas; two children by a former marriage, Jules Winarick, of Irvington, and Mrs. Raymond Parker; a brother, Nathan, of New Brunswick; nine grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

Not Room For Reform In Israel, Says U.S. Orthodox Head

The head of the largest Orthodox rabbinical body sharply criticized Reform Judaism for what he said were its attempts to "undermine the religious unity of Israel and its Chief Rabbinate," says the New York Times. Rabbi Israel Miller, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, asserted that Reform Judaism "will not strike roots in Israel but can only serve as a divisive factor in endangering the unity of the state."

Addressing delegates of the Religious Zionists of America at their annual convention at the Promenade Hotel, at Long Beach, Long Island, N. Y., Rabbi Miller said that "only an indigenous religious movement based on traditional spiritual concepts is able to make any impact in Israel."

Rabbi Miller declared that "the overwhelming majority of the Jews of the world still cling to the tenets of Orthodox Judaism Judaism and practice the ways of that religious faith in their everyday activities. Reform Judaism is disruptive of the cohesiveness which binds all the Jews of the globe under the banner of the Chief Rabbinate."

Recently, Rabbi Jay Kaufman, vice-president of the Reform Union of American Hebrew Congregations, criticized the "steady opposition of Orthodox Jewish groups, particularly the Chief Rabbinate's office, toward new liberal congregations in Israel."

[illegible] says the New York Times. The Chief Rabbinate's office rules on all Jewish marriages and divorces. Persons of other faiths are governed by their own religious courts in these matters.

Rabbi Kaufman said that American Reform Judaism would not seek "to transplant our interpretation of Judaism in the land of Israel," but to develop "a progressive expression of the Jewish faith in the State of Israel, a faith for and by modern Israelis."

Reform Judaism accepts the ethical basis of Judaism but maintains that each generation must bring religious practices into harmony with advances in knowledge.

Rabbi Miller, in his address to the delegates, appealed to religious leaders of both Reform and Conservative Judaism "to desist from any further efforts to bring elements of strife, dissension, and disunity into the religious life of Israel." He said this problem "of religious diversity and conflict has been plaguing the American Jewish community for several years," reports the New York Times. "There is no justification for permitting such divisions and tensions to be imported into the Israeli body politic," he added.

OFFER REWARD FOR BORMANN CHARGED WITH MURDER OF JEWS, PLANS TO DESTROY ALL FOOD IN 1945 TO PREVENT GERMAN SURVIVAL UNDER NAZISM DEFEAT

The West German legal authorities announced that a reward of DM.100,000 (more than $9,000) will be paid for information leading to the capture of Martin Bormann, who was Hitler's deputy. The decision to offer this money — the highest sum yet named by the Germans for wanted Nazis, says the London Times, was taken on the initiative of Dr. Fritz Bauer, the Hessian Prosecutor General, who believes Bormann may be in South America.

Dr. Metzner, who is in charge of the prosecution of wanted Nazis in the Frankfurt area, said the interest aroused when DM.60,000 had been offered for information on Dr. Josef Mengele, the wanted Nazi concentration camp doctor, last summer, made the authorities hope they might get positive evidence on Bormann now. While searching for Mengele they had obtained many reports that Bormann had been seen both in South America and even in Germany, but when they followed them up the trail always petered out.

It was not to be excluded that an underground organization of former Nazis, [illegible] in Germany or abroad. [illegible] authorities.

A warrant for Bormann's arrest has been out since July, 1961, soon after Dr. Bauer began his search. The preliminary charges against Bormann, as drawn up in Frankfurt, alleged shared responsibility for the murder of more than five million Jews and "non-Aryans" during the war and plans for the destruction of all food reserves in Germany in 1945, apparently so that the German people should not survive the defeat of Nazism, says the London Times. Ten years ago Bormann was officially declared by the authorities in west Berlin to have died on May 2, 1945.

The West German Government appealed to governments, private organisations, and individuals throughout the world for information about any previously unknown material which might help to track down Nazi crimes or criminals, says the London Times. This followed an earlier decision in November that no exception could be made to the twenty-year deadline, under German law, for Nazi crimes involving murder.

Asked about the criticism voiced by Israel Deputy Prime Minister Eban, in the Knesset, about the Bonn decision, Herr von Hase, State Secretary of the Federal Press Office, emphasized that the Cabinet's decision had been taken only after the maturest legal and moral consideration.

The effect of the decision is that from May 8, 1965, in the former British occupation zone, and July 1 in the former American zone, no fresh proceedings can be opened against a person suspected of committing or participating in murder before 1945, should evidence have come to light against him. For crimes less than murder the limit expired several years ago.

The Federal Government wants any material, or copies, to be forwarded to the West German Centre for the Investigation of Nazi Crimes at Ludwigsburg, Baden-Württemberg. The Government intends to bring this appeal to the notice of all countries where Nazi crimes were perpetrated, says the London Times.

For the Communist countries with which Bonn maintains no diplomatic relations, the Federal Government proposes to ask the western allies to forward the appeal. In the case of Poland, the Federal German Trade Mission in Warsaw may be used.

[illegible] argued; all that was required was for the German Parliament to pass an already envisaged amendment of the Criminal Code laying down a thirty-year instead of a twenty-year Statute of Limitations for all crimes punishable with lifelong imprisonment, doing this before next May.

In a first comment, the Federal Government argued, however, that this proposal did not get around the constitutional objections to retrospective legislation.

Experts of sixty European resistance movements held a three-day meeting in Antwerp to study the rebirth of Nazi organizations in the world. The experts stated that the Nazi movements are becoming stronger on the five continents, and especially in Egypt, Germany, Austria, Japan, the United States, and South America. The links between these various Nazi organizations are well organized and their propaganda is well directed. In Britain, they stated, groups such as those of Colin Jordan and Sir Oswald Mosley should not be considered as dangerous, says the London Times. The most disquieting aspect in Britain was race hatred, the experts stated.

At least the secretariat for unity had the satisfaction of seeing the drafts on ecumenism as well as that on the Jews and other non-Christians go through with overwhelming majorities.

★ JOINT CAMPAIGN ★

A new record total of $4,154,900 was raised in the 1964 Joint Campaign for Combined Jewish Appeal and United Israel Appeal, it was announced by George H. Scott, Joint Campaign chairman. This total compares with $4,000,408 raised in 1963. "In setting a new campaign record," Mr. Scott pointed out, "we have remained true to the fine tradition established by the Joint Campaign over the past ten years. Our campaign results have gone up every year since 1955. Ten years ago we raised $2,355,564. We now stand at $4,154,900 and I must pay special tribute to every campaign chairman who preceded me for what they have done to make possible this year-by-year increase. It is a fact, that although we had a great campaign and we raised more money than ever in the history of the Combined Jewish Appeal, we did not reach the objective required by our various agencies to do their work." The Joint Campaign was described as "one of the most important devices we have as a total Jewish community for the pursuit of our creative survival in a multi-cultural society," by Alvin Bronstein, executive director. "This campaign, stresses the unity of the Jewish community in meeting our responsibility to our fellow-men wherever they may be. Our concern in the Joint Campaign, goes beyond the members of our own religious faith. The proceeds of the Joint Campaign are used in a great measure to serve all who need and want the services of our agencies as many of them offer services without regard to race, color, or creed. Through this major campaign we contribute greatly to the health, welfare and pursuit of happiness of our entire community, of which we consider ourselves an integral part." George H. Scott, was honored for outstanding leadership at the closing campaign dinner in the Windsor Hotel, and presented with a silver Temple Kiddush Cup and menorah cover by Samuel Bronfman, honorary campaign chairman. The Kiddush Cup, mounted on a marble base, was designed by William Meyer, American silversmith, noted for original silver creations in Jewish religious ceremonial objects. Each of these associate campaign chairmen also received a Kiddush Cup: Henry Blatt, Robert M. Cummings, Max Feldman, Thomas O. Hecht, Jack Kaufman, Mrs. Bess Pascal, Arthur Rudnikoff. The Michael Hirsch Memorial Trophy for the outstanding campaigner was presented to Matt Rozanski, leader of the new donors division, by Allan Bronfman, honorary chairman of the corporations division. A special Merit Award was presented to Sidney B. Cohen who served as a vice-chairman of the trades division, by William Gittes, chairman of the awards committee. Named as outstanding chairman in the professions division, Dr. Abe Mayman, of the medical division, was presented with a special plaque by Thomas O. Hecht, associate chairman in charge of professions. In the trades, these chairmen received special award plaques: Peter Burnett, furs; Harold Salomon, women's wear travellers; Isadore Pollack, ladies' textiles. Jack Kaufman, associate chairman in charge of trades, made the presentations. In the food division, Leo Klein was named outstanding chairman, receiving the Ida Steinberg Memorial Trophy. In the corporations division, Charles Gavsie, Q. C., was named winner of the vice-chairman's Challenge Trophy by Theodore Lands, division chairman. The Mark Workman Trophy for the outstanding worker in the metropolitan division was presented to Hyman Eliey, Metro vice-chairman, by Arthur Rudnikoff, campaign associate chairman, who presented a plaque to Mark Charness as the best campaigner in the young business and professional men's division. In the young adult division, Miss Kayla Shalinsky was named best woman campaigner. They received awards from Robert Cummings, associate campaign chairman, who presented the Lionel Stein Memorial Award to Vera Margolis and Samuel Ballon as outstanding campaigners in the youth division.

★ FAMILY PLANNING ★

Association, whose structure is bilingual and inter-denominational and whose philosophy is "children by choice not chance," has been launched in Montreal, with Rabbi H. Leonard Poller, leader of Temple Beth Sholom, as president. Its purpose is to provide information and research in the area of family planning. Its goal is the establishment of a hospital-sanctioned and hospital-housed family planning clinic. "The emphasis on planned parenthood has never been on having fewer children," said Dr. Anne Tarshis Batshaw, gynecologist, English vice-president of the Montreal Family Planning Association, and mother of two. "The emphasis is on planning for every child so that it will be born when the mother is well and strong and the family able to provide for it adequately." The Family Planning Association of Montreal draws its membership from medicine, theology, education, anthropology, physiotherapy, and demography. It has forty paid members, both French and English-speaking, and a mailing list of 155. Its monthly meetings are conducted in both French and English. Rabbi Poller, is a former member of the Clergy Council of the Baltimore Planned Parenthood Association, and father of three. Montreal is the sixth Canadian centre to establish a family planning association. Others exist in Hamilton, Winnipeg, Ottawa, Vancouver, and Toronto. The Association of Montreal held its first executive meeting on October 15 and its first public meeting on November 19 at McGill University.

Bank of Montreal Annual Report Reaches New Highs

New records in assets, loans, deposits and profits, are all revealed in the Bank of Montreal's 147th annual statement, for the year ended October 31.

Assets rose $393 million, to $4,668 million, while loans in all categories totalled $2,729 million, up $309 million from 1963. Net earnings of $17,854,883 or $2.94 per share, after provision of $18,211,471 for taxes, are 6.6 per cent more than in 1963, when earnings per share were $2.75.

Total deposits at $4,340 million show an increase of $378 million, or 9.5 per cent, over the 1963 figure. Personal savings increased $92.5 million, to $2,030 million, passing the $2 billion mark for the first time.

The total loan figure of $2,729 million includes an increase of $317 million in the key category "commercial and other loans". N.H.A. mortgage loans and call loans were $211 million, and $267 million, respectively.

Securities holdings are shown at $1,143 million, or $43.5 million more than a year ago. "Quick" assets of $2,031 million reflect the traditionally strong liquid position of the bank.

Dividend payments for the year to the bank's more than 28,000 shareholders have amounted to $13,365,000 or $2.20 per share, five cents more than the 1963 figure.

After payments of dividends, the balance of earnings for the year is $4,489,883, to be added to the balance of undivided profits of $1,067,716 carried forward from 1963. This makes a total of $5,557,599, of which $4 million has been transferred to the rest account, now at $158 million. Balance of undivided profits carried forward stands at $1,557,599.

Shhhh...there goes one of Eastern's new Whisperjets.

The people up there are relaxing. This is the quietest kind of airliner... you can talk in a whisper. The reason is simple: the engines—and the noise—are all behind you. It gets off the ground quicker... back on the ground softer than any other kind of jet airliner. Its self-powered air conditioner keeps it as comfortable on the ground as aloft. It has had a more elaborate test program than any other kind of jet airliner. Shhh...the people up there are relaxing. Why don't you join them? A Whisperjet leaves Montreal for New York and Miami at 9.00 a.m.

hotel but his whole entourage was encamped there.

This was the last time I saw Gusik, Neusstadt and the rest of the staff. Some were able to come out. Most of them were killed. Gusik somehow managed to survive. Unfortunately, however, when JDC ordered Gusik to Paris in 1946 for a rest, the plane in which he and another staff member, Gertrude Pinsky, were flying, crashed and the two were killed. Miss Pinsky was returning to California to be married.

In 1938, Santo Domingo, the Dominican Republic, responded to a plea by President Roosevelt at a conference in Evian, France, by offering to take up to 100,000 refugees from Germany and Austria. This led to the organization of the Dominican Republic Settlement Association with James N. Rosenberg as its president. The project was planned by Dr. Joseph Rosen and I was asked to assist him. Later Dr. Rosen became the director.

The first group of refugees arrived in the summer of 1940. Others followed soon afterward. It was a fascinating project. We started from scratch on a piece of land that had been exploited and neglected by the United Fruit Company for fifteen to twenty years. After one year it became a show place. It was called the Sosua project, named for the village where the colony was launched. At the height of the project there must have been some four hundred colonists and another five hundred to seven hundred temporary settlers. The latter were people who were just marking time until they could make their way to another country.

All in all I was with the JDC about twenty-three years. In 1937 I was awarded the French Legion of Honor for service to refugees, and at that time an article was written about my work with JDC. Among other things the article reported that up to the year, 1937, some $50,000,000 (fifty million) in relief funds passed through my hands.

They were gratifying years. If I shared the agony of our people in their hours of need, I also shared their joy in the rebuilding which always followed. If the name "Joint" has become an integral part of Jewish life in Europe, then it was due in large measure to the dedication and devotion of the workers who brought the JDC programs to life; to the Jews of America who by their gifts to the United Jewish Appeal made it possible; and to the Jews of Canada, England, and other countries who have supported its life-saving work over five decades.

CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS DECLARATION ON VATICAN STATEMENT ON THE RELATIONS OF THE CHURCH TO THE NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIONS

Canadian Jewish Congress, an organization representing the Jews of Canada, issued a declaration at its recent national executive meeting commenting on the statement made by the ecumenical Council in Rome on the relations of the Church to the non-Christian religions.

In issuing the declaration, Michael Garber, Q.C., president of Congress, noted: "We are mindful of the dedicated leadership and spirit of liberalism provided by Paul-Emile Cardinal Leger, of Montreal, in concert with like-minded colleagues from other parts of the world." Mr. Garber added: "Through the work of these enlightened individuals within the Catholic Church, it may soon be possible to write a new chapter of understanding and mutual respect among all men."

The text of the declaration reads as follows:

"Jews of the world note with satisfaction the action of the Ecumenical Council in approving so overwhelmingly the Schema on the relation of the Church to the non-Christian religions.

"We realize that the vote of the Council is an initial approval, and that final promulgation must await the fourth session of the Council.

"When the Council fathers will have voted finally on this declaration, and upon its promulgation, the Catholic church will have made an historic contribution to the advancement of harmonious relations among the peoples of the great faiths.

"We are encouraged to hope that formal promulgation of the Schema will mark the continuation of a process that will contribute to the effective elimination of anti-Semitism, and will lead to better understanding among all peoples.

"We reiterate our belief in the distinctive role of Judaism as a separate faith community in making its contribution to the achievement of the common goals of humanity."

Israel's Challenge: Can It Fuse The Separate Families Of Judaism? Asks Harman

Avraham Harman, Israeli Ambassador to the United States, said recently that the new status of the Jews throughout the world, unprecedented opportunities for development with diminishing hostility, raised the question of survival for the "Jewish Experience." He also said: "We must prove to ourselves and to the world that survival of our heritage did not depend on the wall that surrounded us, on outside pressure, but on our love of freedom rooted in our heritage. The greatest challenge facing Israel today and for the next several decades, is whether the nation can fuse the separate families of Judaism: Ashkenazi, Sephardic, and Mizrahi, into one national consciousness of that heritage."

The culture and language of the Ashkenazi, who come from Central and Eastern Europe, are different from that of the Mizrahi who settled in Iraq, and the Sephardic Jews who settled in the entire Mediterranean region, Greece, Turkey, Southern Italy, and North Africa, after leaving Spain in the 15th century of the Common Era. Many speak a 15th century dialect of Spanish called Ladino.

Ambassador Harman made his remarks on "Challenges to Jewry Around The World," before a group of 500 students and guests at Yeshiva University's Nathan Lamport Auditorium, Amsterdam Avenue and 186th Street, Manhattan. His speech was the first in a series by distinguished men in the arts, sciences, and public life on the theme, "Modern Challenges To The Jewish Community," celebrating the tenth anniversary year of Yeshiva University's Stern College for Women, the nation's first liberal arts and sciences college for woman under Jewish auspices.

Reunion of the Jewish people, Ambassador Harman noted, will not take place if the Ashkenazi try to impose their "patterns of experience and culture upon the Sephardim." A common meeting ground for these two groups now exists in France and Israel, where fully half the Jewish populations are Sephardic. He said that the work of accomplishing social homogeneity is expected to occupy a central position in the future development of the Jewish people and of Israel.

The Ambassador left no doubt about the outcome of the struggle to maintain the Jewish consciousness and the Jewish heritage: "Our greatest achievement since 1948 is that Judaism is still in existence, with great new centers of Jewish life. The fact that I am here with you, celebrating the tenth anniversary of Stern College for Women, attests to my optimism of the future."

Ambassador Harman has served the government of Israel since 1948, in a number of important posts prior to his appointment as Ambassador of Israel to the United States in 1959.

Pages From An Overseas Journal: Fifty Million Dollars In Relief Funds In Twenty-Three Years

(This personal account of the early years of the Joint Distribution Committee is by David Schweitzer, who served in various overseas posts. He is now director of fund-raising in Europe for ORT. JDC, a major beneficiary of the United Jewish Appeal, will observe its 50th anniversary December 10-12.)

The first news that greeted me when I arrived in Warsaw to work for the Joint Distribution Committee in 1920 was that Professor Israel Friedlander and Rabbi Bernard Cantor had been killed. They were traveling to some small town in Poland to distribute JDC relief funds when they were set upon by robbers and slain.

Although it was 1920, as far as Poland was concerned the war was still on. Famine and disease were widespread. JDC was spending some $500,000 a month on relief. We had several large warehouses filled with clothing and other supplies for distribution. Our workers also helped to locate relatives for the Polish Jews and transmitted money sent by their relatives in America.

At one point Russian troops, which had invaded Poland, were practically at the gates of Warsaw. The situation became so dangerous that Hugh Gibson, U.S. Minister in Poland, urged JDC to evacuate its headquarters. It was a sad sight. We were forced to flee the city at a time when large numbers of needy Jews were coming daily to Senatorska Street, where the offices were located, for assistance.

All the warehouses were emptied. At least sixty trucks went out. All our money was transferred to Danzig, which was a free port, and an ideal place for us to set up temporary headquarters. If we could not go back to Warsaw then at least we could go somewhere else.

Some of the Polish Jews joined in the evacuation. They lived precariously as refugees in Danzig but of course JDC took care of them. Fortunately, in two weeks' time the Russians were pushed back and we were able to return to Warsaw.

Even before coming to work for JDC I was doing temporary work for the agency in New York, mainly going over records coming from the other side. In 1920 I was sent to Europe in charge of a unit to introduce a uniform accounting system. I was in Warsaw in 1926 when Pilsudski took power.

I was sitting in my room discussing JDC business with a delegation when I heard several explosions. I went downstairs and learned that Pilsudski and his troops were entering Warsaw. I wanted to phone some of our people but was prevented by a policeman. As I stood there not knowing what to do, my friend David Guzik arrived despite the shooting and danger. He led me through side streets to the railroad station which was already a bedlam because Jews from nearby towns, understandably fearful of pogroms, were anxious to get back home. They did not want to be around when Pilsudski and his troops marched into Warsaw.

At the station an announcement was made that only train would be leaving, an express to Berlin. Guzik put me on that train without even a railroad ticket, and that is how I got out of Warsaw. The city was isolated for two or three days but there was no bloodshed when Pilsudski took power.

During the '20's and '30's we were able to achieve great progress in almost all the East European countries, but especially in Poland. There, with JDC to help, the local Jewish communities established child care centers and organized TOZ, a Jewish medical organization. We were also instrumental in opening a nurses' training school in Warsaw and helped to set up 950 free loan kassas and several cooperatives. All these programs received large subventions from JDC at the outset, diminishing as the organizations became stronger and were able, at least partially, to support themselves.

In the 1930's, when Nazism was becoming more and more ominous, there was an increasing movement of Jews out of the country. By this time JDC's European Headquarters was in Paris. I was the only American in the European office at that time, and made frequent trips to Berlin. The German Jews needed not only financial help, but moral support even more. It gave the people a good feeling to know that JDC was on the scene and ready to help.

JDC actively supported HICEM (Jewish migration agency) with subventions and provided travel costs for those who were unable to pay. JDC also helped the community defense programs through the Hilfsverein and the Reichsvertretung.

It was during this time that some of the German Jewish community leaders and I met with Adolf Eichmann. We persuaded him to give us a better rate of exchange on our dollars. It involved several hundred thousand dollars, given to the community to maintain several Hachascharoth, training camps to prepare young people for Palestine. The funds were supposed to provide for the young people for three, six, or nine months, until they could get the necessary travel papers. As a result of the conference we were able to get twice as many marks per dollar as we had gotten before.

Toward the end of 1938 I went to Poland. When I arrived in Warsaw only one staff member, Isaac Giterman, was waiting for me. He directed me out of the railroad station through the back way. When we got to the hotel we found it roped off. We entered through the back door. I subsequently learned that I had been travelling on the same train with Herman Goering and his entourage all the way from Berlin to Warsaw. Goering, who had come ostensibly to hunt, was not at the $4,340,434,848 to be explicit. This figure represents the cash deposits of well over three million Canadians at the Bank of Montreal at the October 31st year-end. And we're the first to point out that the nation is in debt to these customers . . . because most of our depositors' dollars went straight to work on projects vital to Canada's progress and to the well-being of her individual citizens. They're working dollars, employed to the national advantage. In fact at the Bank's year end, $2,728,862,030 was on loan to individuals, to companies and to communities across the nation. Another $874,466,266 was invested in high-grade government bonds and public securities which have a ready market, and $268,181,390 in other securities — mainly short-term credits to industry. Yes, we owed a lot to our more than three million customers in 1964.
